

NATIVE AMERICAN FOSTER FAMILIES NEEDED

Become a foster parent... it's a family tradition

Native American tradition is rooted in the belief and practice that all members of the extended family have an obligation to care for children. Grandparents, aunts and uncles, brothers and sisters, and other relatives all share in the parenting responsibilities.

You're invited to carry forth this important tradition by becoming a foster parent.

To request a packet of information about foster parenting, please contact a member of the Native American Foster/Adopt Recruitment and Retention Task Force by calling either of the following organizations:
